Happy 100th Birthday to Nelson Rossig

(An interview with Nelson-Rossig in 2007 by Helene Rouvier)

The Tribe purchased forty acres on Cock Robin Island last year. The purchase gives the tribe a legal interest in the management of the Eel River; it also provides a place to hold the proposed salmon and eel ceremony planned for next spring. Wiyot elder Nelson Rossig grew up fishing and camping on the Eel River, and continues to be involved in activities affecting the river. Nelson has a wealth of information on the Eel River's history and on the Wiyot people who used its resources. The following excerpts are from an interview with Nelson in May of 2007. Nelson also went out to Cock Robin Island with staff last month, and was able to map where old Indian cabins were located.

We talked first about the new boat ramp planned by the Cock Robin Island Bridge: "No I'm not working on anything...I just kind of, more of less sometimes oversee something, or stick my nose into places they don't belong and like that's the boat ramp down by Cock Robin Bridge. They are building a new boat ramp there...so that's just one thing now that's occurring down the Eel River that Table Bluff Rancheria should be on top of. They bought the piece of property down there so they'll...have more authority to ask questions and do things down there. Well, I'd like to see them ask questions and do things due to the fact that they have property down there now."

Nelson was on the Fish and Game Advisory Committee, and in that role was instrumental in the design and construction of the old boat ramp built by the National Guard. Now he is involved in the new proposed cement boat ramp. This will be the main access to the Tribe's property on Cock Robin Island unless problems with land access are resolved. Nelson has some advice on land access to the Tribe's property: "Being on the Fish and Game Advisory Committee, I was also on the Grand Jury, so I was pretty active in my younger days. I know some of the laws and I think you can create an access to that (tribe's land) if you wish vehicular access to the place there's no problem. You could go across the bridge, keep going on the road, that's a county road clear to the other side, in fact the county road crosses the old river bar there and you can drive clear to Ferndale – that's county road all the way across. Now you listen carefully – from the south side of

DTV Coupon Program Expands

Residents of nursing homes and facilities for intermediate care and assisted living are now eligible to receive one $40 government coupon toward the purchase of a TV converter box.

After Feb. 17, when all TV transmissions will be digital, the converter boxes will be necessary for anyone with an analog TV that relies on an outdoor antenna or indoor rabbit ears to receive TV signals. Nursing home residents, their representative or a family member must fill out special application available online at www.DTV2009.gov.

Post office box holders are also eligible under the new ruling. They can apply for up to two coupons online or call 1-888-388-2009 toll free. They must also provide their home address.

(More information see page 13 of this newsletter)

Cultural Department News and Review

The Bucksport historical exhibit was unveiled October 30th at the Bayshore Mall Food Court. The interpretive panels were a collaborative project between the Wiyot Tribe and Fort Humboldt, and with valuable help from Wiyot elders Irene Carlson and Nelson Rossig. Please stop by and take some time to view the photos and text.

The department is still pursuing repatriation claims. It is slow going, and persistence is needed. Not only is the legislation vague, but museums have little funding or training to follow through. I appreciate the help and support you are giving me, and we are continuing to receive items through individual community members.

The archivist hired through our National Archives and Records Administration grant will be here the week of December 8th. I encourage you to consider what you may have that could be added to the tribal archives, and contact me before she starts assessing our materials. We definitely want to include all types of materials (audio, video, letters, records, photographs) when we plan our policies, equipment, and facility. In a perfect world the scattered departments could all be part of one larger building with security and archival storage conditions. The economic downturn has definitely hit Humboldt County, with the most obvious result a dramatic decrease in development projects and timber harvesting. Agencies are also strapped for staff funding and consultant fees. This translates into a need for more tribal involvement and oversight. Fortunately, the THPO funding seems to be safe for the time being.

The good news is that the Obama administration is poised to make some positive changes for tribes, and for protection of cultural and environmental resources. I hope that we will all stay informed and involved. Voice your priorities on both a local and national level. Check out this message to native peoples at <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=OWocEgu3bPk>

Have a relaxing and joyful holiday season. Peace and prosperity to all.

Cock Robin Bridge to the high water mark you have public access...That means the high water mark of the river during the winter time. So you can create a road on the south side leading right to your property... You might have to take some equipment in there to build the road, but I used to drive up there years ago, drive up even with my two wheel drive to where your property is now, and go fishing up there on the lower end of what we call the Fillmore Pool."

As a kid, Nelson fished and camped on the river; during our visit to Cock Robin Island, he pointed out where he caught his first salmon when 8 or 9 years old. He also pointed out some of the old sites: "There was a pool, called the Mosely Hole down on the western end of Cock Robin Island, that's the Mosely spot near the western end of Cock Robin Island, and the pool there was called the Mosely Hole. I fished there a lot of times...there was another Indian down there called Jim Bartow...He was a rich Indian, he had two cabins, he had one house in the old Table Bluff Reservation, and then he had another one down on the north side of Eel River about straight across from the Mosely Pool. And that slough that runs across...are you familiar with Cannibal Island Road?...you have to cross the bridge before you get down to Crab Park. When you cross that bridge an old filled in slough, that slough that you go over...that's called Bartow Slough. At one time, that slough before it filled in, you could row through there, that was a short cut to go from the Eel River to go to the end to Table Bluff Slough to the rancheria, the old rancheria."

Jerry James also had a cabin across from Cock Robin Island. "A lot of Indians even then had summer cabins somewhere and they had their winter home. Like Jerry, he had a cabin there just on the east side of the end of Cock Robin Bridge." Nelson spent much of his childhood with Jerry, who he called Uncle Jerry, and Jerry's wife Birdie. Although Jerry lived in Bucksport (which he had traded for a piece of land that became a shipyard in Fairhaven), he also had cabins on the South Spit and on the Eel River:

"Jerry had this cabin down there, it was really I think a two room cabin and he had the net rack in front of it, at the bank of the river, a net rack to dry his gill net. See that was in the late twenties, when they used to gill net down there. It was the law that you could commercially gill net on the Eel River when I was a kid you see. I remember going down there, staying over the weekend."

Nelson remembers other early fishermen on the Eel: "Joe Dickerson...I don't even have to mention Joe, he was a great fisherman down there too, fly fisherman, maybe he was kind of an outlaw, I don't know, maybe he gill netted with a shirttail gill net once in a while, just like Bill Seidner, I know he gill netted with a shirttail gill net." Nelson also describes some other early fishing tools: "The old artifacts...split redwood sticks about this big (note: pencil sized thick), a torch...that's the way the Indians used to make light at night for the eels on the riffles, a torch. I used to make them when I was a kid and my uncle Jerry, I called him Uncle Jerry, actually I think (he) was a blood uncle...I would like to make one torch for the museum...I don't think anybody down there knows how to make a torch, and I don't think anybody down there would know how to make an eel hook...that's made out of deer horn or something...Jerry had a surf net to catch surf fish, night fish, that was made from Indian made twine...the whole surf net. I don't know what ever became of that net...not only that they made spear, toggle spear (of deer horn) for the salmon. I don't know if they have any or not. I had one, it was Jerry's...toggle spear with the sinew for the rope. I think that disappeared with the break in (note: of Jerry's house in Bucksport)."

What boats did the Indians use? "Boats? You know that's been a puzzle, I've asked questions and I've never got an answer about the Indians down there with their canoes or boats. All I remember when I was a kid is when I started going down there all the Indians has white man boats, made from lumber. After all the Indians didn't have lumber in those (earlier) days. All they had were dugout canoes. But I can't picture or know of anybody even when I was a kid talking about their dugout canoe or anything. Even when I was a kid there were no more, they were gone I guess, there was white man you see." Later, on our visit to Cock Robin Island, Nelson mentioned that when Jerry first became a commercial fisherman, he used his dugout, with oars and sails, to go out through the bar and fish; Nelson also remembered that his older brother's dugout was stolen from the Eureka pier and never found.

So what of the future? Nelson encourages tribal involvement in the community. "You shouldn't be just a satellite in that rancheria, you should get out and see what the other people are doing outside of the rancheria, then you'll be more or less involved. But you can't be involved if you just pay attention to this little group right here...I think more people on that rancheria should get out and be more involved with the supervisors and what have you – this is called politics. Then you get into politics and do these things, you see the right people, and say the right thing, and you get more done.

HAPPY 100TH BIRTHDAY
NELSON ROSSIG

From the Ground Up

By Helene Rouvier

Martha Herrick arrived in Humboldt County in 1859 – the wife of a Christian missionary. She apparently took an interest in the local Indians, including Wiyot Chief Kiwelata and the Wiyot living around Table Bluff. Her written accounts were published in turn of the century journals and referenced by later historians and linguists. Her unpublished letters are archived in the National Anthropological Archives of the Smithsonian Institution. A selection of her papers were recently received by Ann Roberts of the Ferndale Museum and graciously shared with the Wiyot Tribe. While some information may be not completely accurate, Mrs. Herrick's memories offer a first hand view of Wiyot life in the 1800s. The following are some intriguing excerpts.

Dwellings

The building material of the Indians was red-wood. Selecting a fallen tree, a "wind-fall," that was "eaty" (would not split rift-ways) they proceeded to cut it into logs from six to eight feet in length. This was done by applying red hot stones to the tree trunk until a portion was charred, and could be chopped away by their stone axes, and heated stones again applied. With elkhorn and bone wedges driven by stone mauls, they split from the logs first a slab, then boards about three inches in thickness, and the width of the tree, usually from four to six feet...The houses never varied in their interior arrangement. In the center of the room was left a space, eight or ten inches higher than its surrounding walk. Upon this they built their fires, and did their cooking. The smoke was left to find its own way out of the opening in the roof. Old Billy made this comment upon the white man's waste of fuel: "White man make big fire, stay 'way off. Injun make little fire, stay close up." As the summer crept up the valley, there came to them the longing to be out of the heavy smoky atmosphere of their dark winter houses. So, in some sheltered place near the winter home, they built houses of brush. Drawing upon the ground a circle ten or twelve feet in diameter, they place thereon the butts of young willow or other trees, twenty or more feet in height the leaning tops meeting above, without a center pole.

Cultural From the Ground Up...

Brush was deftly woven round and round the saplings, the ends tucked through to the outside, leaving the inside smooth. The result was a tent...

Each village contained two public houses: the sweat house, and the Serookas' house (woman's house), and in the principal villages of each tribe, was a dance house, the largest that the Indians built.

When they wished to hide themselves in times of war or danger, they built cabins of bark or moss, with cunningly concealed entrances. So perfectly did these places of refuge harmonize with their surroundings, that you might pass within twenty feet of one, and never detect its presence. You stepped from a rock, upon what seemed a projection or continuation of the same, when the lichen surface would yield softly to your weight, sliding you came suddenly into a cave that told an eloquent tale of a time, in years long gone, when discretion had seemed the better part of valor.

Clothing

The dress of the women consisted of two garments reaching from the waist to below the knee. The front was made of buckskin strings, woven crosswise with grasses and grassroots, and was very artistic... The back of the dress, which was a separate piece was an apron of buckskin with a fringe across the turned-over top, and across the bottom...

In place of the woven grass hat, the Indian girls sometimes wore a soft fawnskin head dress, fringed at the lower end, and edged about the face with a tiny band of fur: It was surmounted by a knot of feathers from the yellow-hammer. So cunningly were the quill ends wound with deer sinew thread, and loosely strung, that they stood up in a ponpon (sic) that rose and fell with each turn of the head...

They had another dress which they wore when fishing, made of red-wood bark, beaten until nothing remains but the long fibre, which is sewed into a band and reaches to the feet. When they walk, it floats around them like red silk. It does not absorb water, but stands out like a parachute, effectually hiding the lithe brown limbs of its wearer...

The finest robe made by the Indians is of rabbit skin cut into strips about an inch wide. In drying, a strip rolls together until it resembles a chenille cord. A space six feet square is marked upon the ground, and upon it are laid the cords, side by side. When the space is closely covered, a bone needle with sinew string is run through the cords cross wise, at intervals of an inch. When completed the fur is alike on both sides, and the mystery of its construction is an open challenge.

Food

The staple for bread was fern roots. The ferns grew fifteen feet high, with roots in proportion. The bark having been scraped from the roots, which had a sweet flavor, they were sun-dried, and pulverized in a stone mortar. The flour thus obtained was freed from fibres by sifting through a grass sieve, after which it was packed in storage baskets, for winter use... There was the pi-sock root, with a sweet bulb bearing but one leaf, which resembled in size and shape the ear of a mule; the Indian onion, as the white men called it, grew with a top like a young onion, but the root, resembling an onion in appearance, tasted like an artichoke; wild celery, that tasted like our celery, and the young sprouts of salmon berry. The latter grew in damp ground, and when peeled were pale green, transparent, and tasted like the inside stalk of cabbage, only slightly acid.

Hazel nuts, pepper nuts, and chincapins were found in great quantity. From the time the river banks blushed with wild strawberries, until the Oregon grape hung purple on the uplands, berries held their sway.

Cultural from the Ground Up...Language

Raspberries, blackberries, blueberries, thimbleberries, whortleberries, and high-bush cranberries. Elderberries, black, red, and yellow, grew on elder trees, some of which were full fifty feet high, and two feet in diameter. Salmon berries, resembling the raspberry, but larger, and of a salmon color; shelled berries, growing like poke berries, were as large as hazel nuts, very sweet, with a thick black skin, and a favorite berry with the Indians. The shawava, a berry peculiar to that region, was not good until cooked, which was accomplished by dropping upon them large live coals, and shaking the cooking basket until the coals were dead, and the berries sweet and juicy.

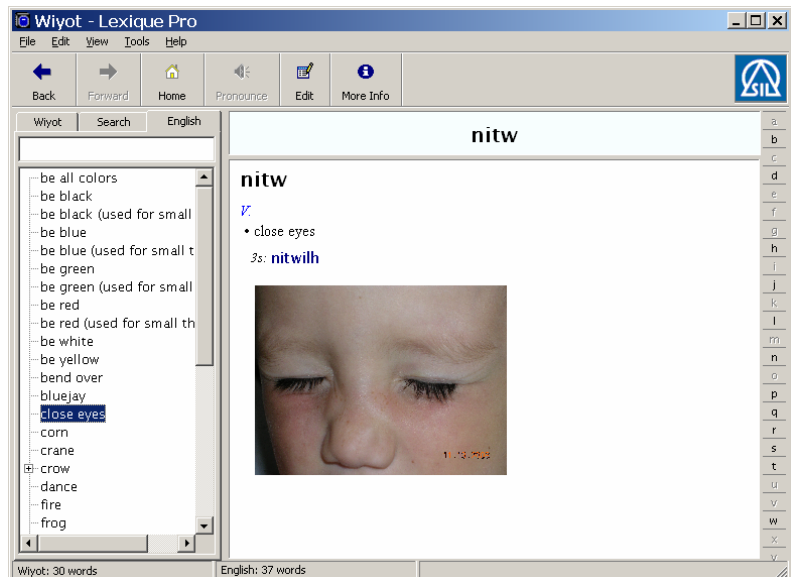

Loleta

Although Mrs. Herrick reportedly has a close friendship with some Wiyot, a different picture is presented by linguist Karl Teeter. "Mrs. Herrick was a person who the Indians felt condescended to them, and they bore little love in return." In 1893, Mrs. Herrick reportedly asked an old Indian to tell her the Wiyot word for the place now known as Loleta. "The actual Wiyot Indian word is katawolhot, but he was not in the mood to give out this information, and answered instead, hosh wiwitak "Come on, let's go to bed!" (We paraphrase an unprintable word)...The story is well authenticated by first hand observers."

Interactive Wiyot Dictionary

One of the projects that I have been working on is an interactive digital dictionary for the Wiyot language. Right now, the dictionary contains the color verbs I discussed in last month's newsletter; names of some animals and plants; and a few verbs for simple activities like 'jump', 'sit', and 'whistle'. The dictionary can be searched in Wiyot or English, includes pictures and video clips, and will soon contain audio clips so that you can hear the pronunciation of a word; new items will be added once every week or two. You can try out the dictionary on any of the three Windows computers at the Center (look for the 'Lexique Pro-Wiyot' icon), or I will be happy to email you a copy! (Installation is very simple and you don't need special software.)

Here is a look at the current dictionary (starring some of the kids from the Boys and Girls Club):

I hope to make this dictionary an ongoing collaboration with the community, which means that I want to hear from you if you would like to:

- request particular words or phrases that you want to learn to say in Wiyot
- contribute your own photos or images for dictionary entries
- record your voice for the 'pronunciation' feature of one or more words in the dictionary

Environment Around Us...

Helpful tips on weatherization and energy conservation

By Tim Nelson

With winter quickly approaching, the demand on gas and electricity will inevitably rise due to colder weather and shorter daylight hours. Plans to increase gas and electricity have already been established, leaving the consumer with higher utility bills. Luckily, there are specific steps and products one can follow and purchase in order to buffer these increasing fees. Putting the time, money, and effort in before hand may potentially save you hundreds of dollars in the long run.

Weatherizing your dwelling requires insulation, weatherstripping, caulking, etc. in order to conserve heat. Two main factors usually involved in the direct heat loss from your home include: inadequate insulation and existing air and moisture leaks primarily around doors and windows. The top 5 primary places where outside air infiltrates your home include: 31% floors, ceilings, walls, 15% ducts, 14% fireplace, 13% plumbing penetrations, and 11% doors. Inadequate insulation allows heat to escape from your house via your roof and floor during colder months and allows more heat (via direct sunlight) to enter your home during the hotter months. Existing air and moisture leaks are problem as well as the average air loss in a typical American home is equivalent to leaving one window completely open! Moisture control is also an important aspect of maintaining an energy-efficient home. If humid air leaks into cool spaces, moisture can condense on the cool surfaces and cause damage.

There are ways to determine where your house may potentially be losing heat thus, raising your utility bill. An energy audit can be conducted either by a professional, your utility provider (usually free of charge), or by yourself. If the cost of a professional is too high and you are having trouble reaching your utility provider, here is a helpful link to guide you through your energy audit:

<http://www.doityourself.com/stry/weatherizeaudit>

After your audit, the next steps involve repairing any damages, air gaps, installing insulation, etc. As a reminder, fiberglass is often found in weatherization materials and can pose a serious health risk. Please take proper safety precautions to avoid possible injury. Below are links to help guide you in the installation of weatherization materials:

<http://www.dom.com/customer/efficiency/res/ten.jsp>

http://www.bpa.gov/energy/nl/energy_Tips/weatherization/

Did you know that the major utility provider, Pacific Gas & Electric offers free weatherization for families that qualify? Through the Energy Partners Program, a qualified customer of PG&E may be eligible for attic insulation, door replacement and weatherstripping, minor caulking, and home repairs. Also, they may replace appliances such as refrigerators, air conditioners, and evaporative coolers. For more information and/or to fill out the qualification form, visit:

The Wiyot Tribe's Community Garden Update

The community garden has provided great, nutritious fruits and vegetables to the residents on the reservation. Unfortunately, winter is upon us and thus it is time to prepare the soil by tilling the ground, planting a cover crop, and overwintering species such as strawberries and garlic. This year the garden has provided harvests including lettuce, cabbage, zucchini, squash, bok choy, chard, kale, potatoes, carrots, radish, and and broccoli, Brussels sprouts, pumpkins for Halloween and Thanksgiving, Walla Walla onions, cucumbers, and a variety of herbs. These harvests have been harvested (~300 lbs) and used for community events such as Wiyot Day, elder's dinner, and tribal council meetings or given to residents. The department would like to thank all the youth volunteers that helped to make this growing season a success!

Volunteers are always welcome to come and help out or if you are interested, just stop on by and we will be happy to give you a tour. If you have any questions, suggestions, and/or would like to pick up some information, call or visit the Environmental department.

CONVERTER BOX COUPON PROGRAM

February 17, 2009 the nation's full-power television stations will make the switch to digital broadcasting. According to a recent report by the Nielsen Company, more than nine million households are not ready for the upcoming transition to all-digital broadcasting and would be unable to receive any television programming at all if the transition occurred today.

The United States Department of Commerce has established the TV Converter Box Coupon Program to assist consumers that plan to continue to use their analog televisions, necessitating a converter box. The federally sponsored coupon program offers a three step process to obtain up to two $40 coupons to help pay for the anticipated cost of the television converter box.

Applications for these coupons must be received by December 31, 2008. The estimated time from submitting an application to testing the new converter box in a consumer's home, is six weeks.

The CDE is cooperating with the U.S. Department of Commerce in distributing information promoting the availability of financial assistance for consumers in preparing for this historic switch. Please use your distribution and communication channels to assist parents and households that could lose their television reception if they do not act prior to the transition on February 17, 2009. Information sheets that explain these steps are enclosed and available at www.DTV2009.gov (Outside Source).

December is National Drunk and Drugged Driving Prevention Month

By Presidential Proclamation since 1981, each December is dedicated to preventing motor vehicle crashes caused by impaired driving. December has been chosen because it is the month of parties, family gatherings and other events where liquor is available.

About 40 percent of all traffic-related deaths in the United States are alcohol related, according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration. An alcohol-related motor vehicle crash kills someone every 31 minutes and injures someone every two Minutes.

Total financial costs are astounding. They exceed $24 billion each year. For individuals arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol and/or drugs, the financial consequences can be huge. In Pennsylvania, a first-time offense can cost a fine of up to $5,000.

Other costs include vehicle towing and impounding, attorney fees, court fees, higher car insurance premiums and fees for safety classes. Estimates of the total cost by the office of motor vehicles in Arkansas come to $22,740. The personal cost of a conviction are difficult to endure. Loss of a driver's license causes multiple problems and in some cases, loss of employment. It is a misdemeanor offense which stays on record for seven years and could impact work opportunities in the future. Even when a job isn't lost, time off may have to be taken for jail time, safe driving courses or public service.

Maybe you've heard all of this before, but stop to think of how being arrested would affect you and your family.

Proclamation by Governor of California

On display in the Tribal Office lobby is the special Proclamation that Governor Schwarzenegger initiated October 8, 2008, declaring November as

"Native American Heritage Month."

He says, "today, our Golden State is home to over 300,000 Native Americans, comprising sixty-nine indigenous tribal groups. These men and women have not only continued their ancestors' culture, but have also forged new accomplishments in government, business, science, the arts and more. They have also dedicated themselves to keeping past traditions alive by educating future generations of Californians on their rich history."
